Video - Rajeev Suri, CEO of Nokia

On the eve of Nokia's one-hundred and fiftieth anniversary, I am pleased to be able to share some very exciting news.

Today we announced that we have reached an agreement to join with Alcatel-Lucent, a company with a history that is as long, proud and storied as our own; a company with deep roots in France, the United States and many other countries; a company that we are proud to bring into the Nokia family.

We plan to keep the Nokia name, but let there be no doubt that we want to share the best of both companies as we come together.

With this transaction we expect to create an innovation leader in next generation technology and services for the connected world – a company with a strong presence in many parts of the world and with deep European heritage.

We aim to create a global leader that will have unparalleled innovation capabilities and deep expertise in the technologies of tomorrow. Just think about the possibilities of Bell Labs and Nokia FutureWorks together. All together, just think about the possibilities of more than forty-thousand R&D employees, and a combined annual spend of 4.7 billion euros.

And add to this Nokia Technologies. TECH, as we call it, is a great source of innovation, expertise and intellectual property. Nokia Technologies will continue on its current path, with a clear focus on incubating new technologies and sharing those technologies through an active licensing program, independently of our networks business.

We expect to create a global leader that has the scope to enable seamless connectivity for people and things wherever they are.

Edgar Filing: ALCATEL LUCENT - Form 425

We expect to create a global leader with the scale to pursue top positions in every area we choose to compete in, to drive profitable growth, meet the needs of global customers, develop new technologies and create value for our shareholders.

We expect to create a global leader with deep relationships with customers in most parts of the world and immediate capabilities to solve the most pressing challenges of customers both old and new; a company positioned to open up new markets and new customers, spanning telco, cable, internet, governments, enterprise and industry verticals.

We expect to create a global leader with a passion for operational excellence and creating value for customers and shareholders alike. For evidence of this, look no further than Nokia's dramatic transformation in recent years and the remarkable success of Alcatel-Lucent's Shift Plan.

We know how to integrate, we know how to operate extremely efficiently, and we know how to deliver synergies fast.

Also today we announced that we have initiated a strategic review of HERE, our [mapping and location intelligence] business. We are proud of HERE and continue to see it in a strong position to grow in the coming years. But, as we plan to add Alcatel-Lucent, a review is simply a prudent step, and we will evaluate options for HERE in order to make the best possible decisions for our shareholders.

As exciting as the Alcatel-Lucent transaction is, as many benefits as it will bring, I also know that change can also be disruptive. Let me address that topic head-on.

To our customers, we will keep our focus where it matters: on you. We have learned the challenges of integrating companies, and are prepared to take those learnings and make this one as seamless as possible.

We also know that technology has moved on since earlier industry deals, allowing faster and easier transition to the latest products and software.

To our employees, the talk of synergies will cause concern. And, I will be open that there are areas of overlap and that means headcount reductions will be required. But, we will target savings from other areas as well such as procurement so employees do not bear the brunt of the change alone. And, where reductions are necessary, we will do our best to manage them in an open and fair way.

To the communities in which we operate, this transaction is expected to create an even stronger company. Yes, changes will have to come, but we see our long-term position as stronger than ever and that is good for you and good for all of our stakeholders.

To our new friends in France, we are pleased to join with you and I believe we share the same ambition, the ambition to strengthen the technology ecosystem, and drive new innovation in your country.

To our partners, we still want to work with you. We are of the firm belief that partnerships are essential to our success, and that the telco ecosystem needs more partnerships, not less.

And, to our shareholders, I share my firm belief that this is the right deal, with the right logic, at the right time.

[PAUSE]

Nokia has gone through many transformations in its 150 year history and my colleagues and I know that we are stewards of a remarkable legacy. Now, when this transaction closes, we will have the responsibility to be stewards of another legacy, that of Alcatel-Lucent.

And, together, we will have the opportunity to build something that delivers benefits well beyond the confines of our offices and labs.

Together, we have the opportunity to build the foundation of what we call the programmable world, a world where connected things combine in extraordinary ways.

Ways that make our planet cleaner and safer.

Ways that create new possibilities for people and business.

Ways that enable efficiency and opportunity.

Ways that improve lives.

These are exciting times.

Thank you for your time, thank you for listening.
