» Tom Horton, Doug Parker Provide Update on Merger Progress

In a joint communication to the people of both American and US Airways, Tom Horton and Doug Parker discuss progress being made for the merger of the two airlines through the Integration Management Office (IMO). At this point, 29 integration planning teams and several cross-functional task forces are at work to define the manner in which the two companies will combine our commercial, customer service, operations and corporate functions after the merger closes, state Tom and Doug. One of our priorities is putting together the strongest possible leadership team for our combined airline. We are taking the right amount of time to make the most thoughtful decisions and to get it right not to do it quickly. We go into this task confident that we have tremendous people at each airline and will only be stronger together when we make the right leadership selections. We announced our merger in mid-February and expect to announce the new senior leadership team, Doug's direct reports, sometime late this month or in early June. We will build out the rest of the officer corps from there. We know there is much interest in this, and we will keep you informed along the way. Find out more in new Jetnet's Merger space.

Korean Air, American to Square off in Seoul Battle

Dallas/Fort Worth travelers have had five flights a week they can pick from if they've wanted to fly nonstop to Seoul, South Korea. Later this week, they'll have 14. That's because Korean Airlines increases its DFW-Seoul offerings today to daily service from its five weekly flights. And American launches daily nonstop DFW-Seoul flights on Thursday.

Editor's Note: Stay tuned for more information on the DFW-Seoul launch this week on new Jetnet.

Pinnacle Emerges from Chapter 11 as Delta Subsidiary

Pinnacle Airlines has emerged from Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection and will move forward as a wholly owned subsidiary of Delta. Delta backed Pinnacle when it first entered Chapter 11 in April 2012, providing $74.3 million in debtor-in-possession financing that Pinnacle believed it needed to stay afloat. Delta, for which Pinnacle operates Delta Connection flights, has said the regional airline's long-term stability is in its best interests. Memphis-based Pinnacle hopes to find that stability in Minneapolis, to which it will shortly move its headquarters, as a Delta unit operating only Delta Connection flights. It will retain its own operating certificate. Pinnacle used the Chapter 11 process to wind down United-branded flying, end US Airways-branded Essential Air Service (EAS) routes and close down subsidiaries Colgan Air and Mesaba Aviation.

Boeing Board Gives Approval to Offer 777X

Some six weeks after officially selecting General Electric (GE) as its engine partner for the 777X, Boeing has been given the green light by the its Board to formally start offering the stretched twinjet to customers. Boeing says it is taking the next step by engaging in the marketplace, discussing more details and offering the airplane to customers conditional on final approval to launch the program. Although the company's announcement falls short of the traditional authority to offer (ATO) language used in former programs, the approval is thought to be the equivalent of the traditional ATO milestone. Given the schedule of previous efforts, the decision puts Boeing and GE on track for a potential launch around October or November 2013, and places both companies at the start of a six-year development track culminating with the entry into service of the first of two new 777 family members in 2019. The extended twinjet series will include a 353-seat 777-8LX, sized to succeed today's 777-300ER, and the 406-seat 777-9X, which opens up new territory in the higher capacity long-range market. The larger model is provisionally slated to debut first, with the -8LX following around 2021. As with the current longer-range 777 models which are powered exclusively by GE90-110/115Bs, the 777X will be offered only with the 100,000 lb. thrust GE9X.

Safety First Tip of the Week

Falls are the number one cause of home injury deaths in America. On stairways alone, falls result in almost two million disabling injuries annually. But you can make your stairs safer by making sure you keep a sturdy rail on both sides, clutter away from the stairs and light at both the top and bottom.
