Entergy, ITC Withdraw Application at PUCT; Opportunity to Re-file

The proposed merger of Entergy's transmission business into ITC ended its first state commission hearing on Friday in Texas without a ruling but with an opportunity to re-file a more comprehensive application that would include the full scope of the rate mitigation plan.

After extensive discussion in the August 9 open meeting of the Public Utility Commission of Texas, commissioners accepted the Entergy and ITC joint proposal to withdraw the application with the opportunity to re-file it. This would allow for inclusion in the record updated information on all of the commitments the companies have already indicated they are prepared to make, anchored by a rate mitigation plan for customers.

The commitments, including the more favorable customer protections offered by the companies, were precluded from the record in the Texas docket because the material was developed too late to be considered.

However, in Friday's open meeting, commissioners clearly preferred to consider all of the facts of the case. Commissioners and leaders from both companies also discussed extensively a number of newly suggested conditions for approval.

We appreciate the commission's decision allowing us the opportunity to re-file our application so that our commitments can be formally considered, said Sallie Rainer, president and chief executive officer of Entergy Texas, Inc. We continue to believe that the transaction is good for our customers and the region and are currently assessing the right path forward.
