Invacare Corporation (NYSE: IVC) announced today, August 2, 2004, that the Company has signed a definitive agreement to purchase WP Domus GmbH ("Domus") for 190 million euros or approximately $230 million at recent exchange rates. A European-based holding company, Domus designs and manufactures several complementary product lines to Invacare's existing product lines, including power add-on products, bath lifts and walking aids. Domus currently has three divisions, Alber, Aquatec and Dolomite, which are operated on an independent basis and are branded separately. The definitive agreement is subject to German and Norwegian regulatory approvals, which are expected to be received within 120 days, and other customary conditions. Domus is forecast to have sales in 2004 of approximately 96 million euros or $116 million at recent exchange rates.

The three Domus companies are expected to be operated as independently run units of Invacare under each of the units' current management teams. In markets where Alber, Aquatec or Dolomite do not have their own direct sales forces, Invacare's sales forces are expected to provide opportunities to expand sales for such units.

The acquisition of Domus should add between 25-30 cents to earnings in 2005. In the remainder of 2004, the acquisition should be immediately accretive. However, due to the timing of regulatory approval, the company expects minimal addition to EPS in 2004. It is estimated that the acquisition will take the Company's debt-to-total-capitalization to approximately 40%.

A copy of the issued press release is attached as Exhibit 99.1.
