MediaNews Group Files Definitive Consent Solicitation Materials, Announces Cash Tender Offer and Releases Shareholder Presentation at www.revitalizemonster.com

DENVER, CO--(Marketwired – October 20, 2016) - MediaNews Group, Inc. ("MNG"), the largest shareholder of Monster Worldwide, Inc. (NYSE: MWW) ("Monster" or the "Company"), with an ownership interest of 11.5% of Monster's outstanding shares, announced it has released an open letter to Monster shareholders along with its definitive consent solicitation materials filed today with the Securities and Exchange Commission (the "SEC") and announced that it (through an affiliate) intends to make a cash tender offer for up to 8,925,815 shares of common stock of Monster at a price of $3.70 per share.

The offer price of $3.70 per share represents a 9.8% premium to the closing price of the Monster common stock reported on the NYSE on October 20, 2016, the last full trading day before we announced the tender offer and a 33.6% premium to the closing price of the Monster common stock reported on the NYSE on August 8, 2016, the last full trading day before announcement of the Randstad merger agreement. The number of shares MNG intends to offer to purchase in the tender offer represents approximately 10% of the outstanding shares of Monster common stock. The tender offer will be open to all Monster shareholders.

After giving effect to the tender offer, assuming the purchase of 100% of the Monster common stock sought in the tender offer, MNG is expected to own 19,225,815 shares of Monster common stock or 21.5% of the Company. MNG is not able to purchase more than 25% of the outstanding Monster common stock without causing a "Change of Control" under the Monster credit agreement. MNG'S offer will not be subject to a financing condition, however, it will be subject to certain other conditions, including the termination of both the Randstad tender offer and merger agreement.

Once the tender offer is commenced, offering materials will be mailed to Monster shareholders and filed with the SEC. Monster shareholders should read the offering materials when they become available, because they will contain important information. The tender offer will be held open for at least 20 business days following its commencement, and tenders of shares must be made prior to the expiration of the tender offer period.

Additionally, MNG has released an extensive shareholder presentation outlining 1) its strategic plan to revitalize Monster and 2) its director candidates' substantial qualifications to replace the current Board of Directors. The presentation and other information related to MNG's campaign can be found at www.revitalizemonster.com.

MNG's nominees for the Monster Board of Directors are:

Hon. Gregory Slayton, former U.S. Chief of Mission (defacto Ambassador) to Bermuda, successful technology executive/investor, was an early investor and previously on the advisory boards of Google and Salesforce.com.
The full text of MNG's letter is included below:

Dear Fellow Shareholder:

MediaNews Group, Inc. ("MNG"), currently has an ownership interest of approximately 11.5% of the outstanding shares of Monster Worldwide, Inc. ("Monster" or the "Company"), making us the Company's largest shareholder. We have nominated seven highly qualified candidates to replace the current Board of Directors at Monster, as this Board has proven time and again its inability to make the right strategic and operational decisions to maximize shareholder value at the Company. The current deal with Randstad at $3.40 per share and the "process" that resulted in this offer is just one example in a long line of poor decision-making by the current Board. In addition to entering into the Randstad deal, this Board oversaw a decline in revenue of over 24% since 2012 and approved a stock repurchase program that had the Company buying back stock in December of 2015 at an average price of $5.99, only to advise shareholders to accept $3.40 per share from Randstad months later. Our director candidates are significantly more qualified and more experienced than the existing Board and one of our candidates, Daniel Dienst, is prepared to serve as interim CEO so that the turnaround at Monster can begin immediately after our directors are seated.

Why Are We Here? A Better Path Forward For All Monster Shareholders

MNG initially established a position in Monster in July of 2016 because we believed the stock was tremendously undervalued relative to its long-term prospects. We continue to strongly believe this is the case and that the deal with Randstad at $3.40 per share significantly undervalues the Company. Our nominees are dedicated to executing a plan to maximize shareholder value for all investors and while MNG would make a profit if the Randstad deal closes, we believe there is SIGNIFICANTLY more upside for everyone if the Company is managed properly over the long-term.

MNG has a significant and deep understanding of the pressures facing Monster and the changes going on in the recruitment advertising industry. This, in part, is based on the following:

- MNG has been a partner of Monster's for many years
- We own and operate a job board business of our own
- We have evaluated multiple other job board businesses as potential acquisitions

We operate over 240 newspaper properties in an industry that has gone through its own dramatic shift in recent history

We are confident that with the right talent and plan, Monster can reduce its revenue declines and increase profitability, despite the numerous headwinds facing the Company. We believe the main issues facing Monster are its lack of competent management, its poor strategy to address the shift in the business, and its completely inadequate oversight by a Board that doesn't have the experience, skills or desire to turn the business around.

Our current plan for change focuses on three key areas – 1) returning to growth, 2) optimizing the cost structure and 3) monetizing/restructuring non-core assets – and would specifically involve the following initiatives:

- Reduce expenses by $100-$150 million through implementation of operational best practices
- Monetize non-core/underperforming assets that are not being valued at all in current stock price
- Reduce capital expenditures to be more in-line with competitors and other digital companies
 - Simplify the product offering and increase sales productivity

Focus marketing efforts on B2B customer acquisition and candidate acquisition, with a focus on ROI, and execute a rebranding campaign to attract millennials

Our strategy for Monster is well thought out and the result of an exhaustive study of the business and industry, combined with our Board's relevant experience executing these types of initiatives, both at MNG and a host of other businesses. MNG has experience, both at our newspapers and our job board business, making significant expense reductions while minimizing impacts to revenue, and our strategy is greatly informed by these experiences. At MNG, we have reduced total operating expenses significantly over the last few years and our revenue performance has been as good or better than similar large newspaper companies in the industry over that same time period. Additionally, at our Jobs in the US business, we've been able to significantly reduce expense while actually growing revenue over the last few years.

With the right execution and strategy, focused around the key initiatives listed above, we believe Monster has the ability to deliver long-overdue value to shareholders and can achieve a stock price of $6 - $8 per share over the next 18 months.

Recent Restructuring Actions at the Company Have Not Gone Nearly Far Enough

Monster claims that they have "already taken" actions to address challenges by cutting expenses over $100 million during the past several years, cutting capital expenditures by 50% and divesting non-core or underperforming assets.

To be clear, the Company has not gone nearly far enough in terms of what it could or should do to rein in expenses, reduce capital spending and divest, restructure or shutdown under-performing assets.

With regards to operating expenses, Monster still has close to 3,700 employees, with over 1,000 in sales^[i] and over 61 offices in 23 countries^[iii]. We simply do not accept the notion that the Company has done everything it can to reduce operating expense.

Monster spends more on capital expenditures as a percentage of its revenue than its competitors and this management team/Board has a terrible track record when it comes to generating a return on capital invested – return on capital has ranged annually from 0.4% to 4.4% since 2013^[iii]. We are confident that significant improvements can be made to the product even with a reduced capital expenditures budget and what is clear is that the money being spent now is generating minimal returns for shareholders.

The Company also contends that all non-core or underperforming assets have been divested. It's disingenuous for the Company to say it has done everything it can here when the international business alone has been unprofitable for the last 3 years. Clearly there is more to do to either restructure, sell or shutdown pieces of the international business. Moreover, our suspicion is that there are other parts of Monster's business, when analyzed with the necessary level of scrutiny, that would fall into the same category.

MNG is NOT Trying to Take Control of Monster

Monster claims we are trying to take control of the Company without paying a control premium. Comparing a campaign to remove and replace the Board of an underperforming company with an offer to acquire the whole business is akin to comparing apples and oranges. We are offering shareholders a credible and preferable alternative to the sub-optimal Randstad deal. Additionally, since we are shareholders in the Company and intend to continue being shareholders once our nominees are elected to the Board, we are completely aligned with all shareholders in our desire to maximize the value of the Company.

MNG has a long-term view on its Monster investment and strong conviction around the well thought out plan we've put together and the experienced slate we've assembled. We are confident the opportunity exists to create significantly more shareholder value if the right Board and leadership team is put in place and the business is operated properly.

Collectively, our Board has experience working on 27 turnaround situations and seventeen years of experience working within the recruitment advertising industry. The strategy we are proposing for Monster is absolutely realistic and our Board has the experience and know-how to execute it effectively.

Questionable Strategic and Operational Decisions by the Incumbent Board

The Company's financial performance under the current Board has been terrible, with revenue declining by over 24% since 2012 and stock performance suffering as a result.

Source: S&P Capital IQ^{iv}

The incumbent Board has a long history of poor decision-making that has negatively impacted shareholder value. This is the Board that:

- Brought Tim Yates in as CEO in November 2014 and also re-appointed him CFO in February of 2016 despite his poor previous track record of creating value for shareholders at Monster

- Granted Tim Yates a golden parachute of over $4.9 million^[v], despite little skin in the game and even though the stock is down 92%^[vi] since he joined the Company as an executive in June of 2007

- Focused on having discussions to sell Monster when it was trading at or around all-time lows, instead of devising and executing a plan to fix the business

- Authorized a stock buyback at over $6.00 per share in Q4 of 2015, only to sell the business for $3.40 months later

- Wasted $12.5 million to acquire Jobr, a start-up mobile app with little revenue or specialized technology – MNG priced out what it would cost to develop virtually the same app as Jobr and believes it would cost less than $250k to develop, or 2% of the price paid to acquire it

- Spending $12.5 million in cash at this time for an app that has virtually no revenue and little in the way of technology differentiation makes no sense and is another example of poor capital allocation

- Asserted they have “already taken” actions to address challenges by cutting expenses over $100M over the past several years; the reality is that the Company has not gone nearly far enough in terms of what it could do to rein in expenses & reduce capital expenditures; key ratios indicate Monster is severely underperforming peers and has a bloated cost structure

- Claimed they have divested all of the non-core and underperforming businesses; the reality is that there are still several underperforming business units that should be evaluated for divestiture, restructuring, or shutdown if there is no viable path to achieve acceptable profitability

- Enabled a lack of product strategy to address shifting market & revenue declines

- Demonstrated apparent tolerance for corporate lethargy and erosion of leadership position in market

- Has consistently talked down the business and its prospects in an attempt to ram through the Randstad deal^[vii]

Given this history of poor decision making, why should shareholders now believe the Board when it says that the Randstad deal is the best option to deliver value?

Flawed, Rushed Sale Process Raises Questions about Incumbent Board's Motivations

An outright sale of the Company was not – and is not – the only option. The incumbent Board took the easy way out via a “fire-sale” since they have little skin in the game, as the incumbent non-employee directors collectively own a measly 0.3% of the stock^[viii]. It is clear to us that the Randstad deal was entered into by the Board out of desperation to avoid responsibility for yet another quarterly miss by the Company.

The Company did not negotiate a go-shop provision with Randstad, even though they did not run a formal auction process. While other potential buyers are able to technically submit bids, practically speaking, the rushed nature of the process would make it hard for any public company, private company with a sophisticated Board, or traditional private equity firm to participate. These types of potential buyers are used to more formal processes with structured bidding rounds, reasonable deadlines and a level playing field for all participants. We have talked to multiple companies who have stated that they would have participated in a formal process had the Company run one.

Moreover, now that the deal with Randstad has been executed, potentially going “hostile” and submitting a competing bid with no access to diligence is not something most public companies, large private companies or traditional private equity funds are comfortable with, thereby severely limiting potential bid activity post the execution of the merger agreement.

Aside from the rushed, flawed nature of the “process” the Company ran, we take issue with the fact that the Company was exploring a sale without evaluating all other alternatives for restructuring the business. As we’ve stated before, we don’t believe now is the right time to sell the Company, especially without an exhaustive evaluation of other options to improve the business, and there is no evidence the Company went through this type of evaluation.

Potential short-term price movements SHOULD NOT be a motivating factor for a Board and management team and it’s clear that this, at least in part, was driving the Company’s motivation to get a deal done so quickly with Randstad.

Board Has Enabled Tim Yates to Potentially Make Over $4.9 Million if Randstad Deal Closes

Monster CEO Tim Yates automatically gets paid over $1.7 million^[ix] if the Randstad deal closes - even if he keeps his job - because the Board foolishly awarded equity awards with single-trigger change in control provisions to executives prior to March of 2016 and allowed him to negotiate the deal. Mr. Yates stands to make over $4.9 million^[x] if the Randstad deal is successful and he is terminated “without cause” or terminates “for “good reason.”

Mr. Yates owns less than 1%^[xi] of the Company and has very little “skin in the game.” Given the fact that the Company’s stock has declined by over 92% since he first became involved in the business in 2007, and over 55% the last 12 months^[xii], it seems wholly unfair to shareholders that he stands to make such a financial windfall for “selling at the bottom.”

Despite Mr. Yates’ obvious conflicts resulting from his golden parachutes and lack of substantial ownership of the Company, Monster's Board still allowed Mr. Yates to run the Company's haphazard sales "process" and completely relied on him for negotiations and updates.
